FOREWORD

The Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute will be completing the twenty-fifth year of its services to Oriental learning on 6th July 1942. One of the many enterprises undertaken by the Institute to promote Oriental research was to start a research journal of its own, namely, the Annals of the Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute. The first number of the Annals was issued in July 1919, and since then twenty-two volumes have so far been published. Thanks to the sincere efforts of its successive editors to maintain a sufficiently high standard the Annals now ranks among the foremost of the journals devoted to Indology. I should like to take this opportunity to express on behalf of the Institute my sense of gratitude to all the learned contributors to the Annals without whose kind co-operation this achievement would not have at all been possible.

On the eve of the Silver Jubilee of the Institute, which will be celebrated sometime during the course of this year, it was considered advisable to take stock of the work done by the Institute through its research journal. As an aid to this we are publishing today a complete index to the first twenty-one volumes of the Annals, arranged according to titles and authors. The index to the titles will clearly indicate the wide range of subjects dealt with in the numerous articles published in the Annals, during this long period, while the index to authors will be an adequate testimony to the quality of those articles. The importance of such indexes to future workers in the field of Oriental research is too patent to need elucidation.

It was recently decided by the authorities of the Institute to commence the future volumes of the Annals in January and not in October as heretofore. The twenty-second volume is accordingly made to correspond with the Calendar year 1941. As the result of this change, members and subscribers will not have received the issue of the Annals, which was due in October 1940. We are therefore offering the present volume comprising the indexes in lieu of that issue.

The indexes are prepared entirely by Mr. G. N. Shrigondekar of the Publication Department of the Institute. He has already to his credit major portion of the index to the " Collected Works of Sir R. G. Bhandarkar, " published by the Institute. It has given him an insight in this type of work. It was originally proposed to include herein also an index according to subjects ; but the increasingly prohibitive cost of paper has compelled us to postpone the idea for the present.
